

Given that the cable companies have been granted access to public land to build their infrastructure, the public should require them to allow other companies to benefit from that access. Obviously, they should not be required to provide access to their competitors at below cost. However, allowing them to set prices so as to prevent competition lessens the benefit consumers get from the use of land that they - as members of the public - own.